ACSS stands for Automated Clearing Settlement System, which is the clearing network for electronic funds transfers in Canada. Using the ACSS network, banks can process financial transactions electronically. Once you register and add your bank account in the site to register it as debit account for your future remittances, your account will be verified for its correctness and authenticity. It is done using the Canadian Automated Clearing Settlement System (ACSS) mechanism.

In ACSS mechanism, your account gets directly debited. To protect your account from unauthorized transactions, verification is done whether the person logging a remittance request has valid access to operate the registered Canada bank account. This is done through two sub-dollar transactions in your account to be debited. The amount of the credit transaction is more than the debit transaction. Once these transactions are successfully posted to your debit account, the bank sends an Email on your registered Email ID requesting you to confirm the amount of the ACSS test transactions.

You then have to login to <https://remit.onlinesbi.com/glscanada> with the login credentials you have already set and then provide these two sub-dollar debit/credit values under ACSS Test Confirmation link.
